Sarvenaz ("Nazy") Fahimi is a partner practicing in several areas of litigation, with a focus on high profile cases of fraud, cases involving the Federal and California False Claims Acts, and representing businesses in commercial disputes.

Nazy began her career practicing in commercial litigation at a prestigious firm in her hometown of Minneapolis, Minnesota. She moved to the Bay Area and continued working in litigation and other areas of the law. She has worked on antitrust and trade regulation cases, aviation cases, breach of contract and commercial disputes, employment disputes, personal injury cases, insurance coverage and bad faith cases, as well as discrimination and civil rights cases. Most recently, prior to joining CPM, she worked at a 501(c)(3) non-profit for several years, focusing on advocacy and community service, while also handling in house legal matters, including providing in-depth employment law and compliance counseling. In her role there, Nazy collaborated with various civic and community organizations and presented seminars and participated in panels on various legal topics, including in the area of U.S. trade embargoes and sanctions, through the Department of Treasury's Office of Foreign Assets Control.

Nazy graduated cum laude from Marquette University Law School in Wisconsin. During law school, she served as a Member and subsequently a Note and Comment Editor of the Marquette Law Review, earned awards as the highest scoring student, including in Constitutional Law, and became a member of Alpha Sigma Nu, the National Jesuit Honor Society. As an undergraduate, Nazy also received her BA from Marquette University.
